PRESS RELEASE

DKRW Wind announces sale of Cedro Hill project

Laredo, Texas, October 5, 2009 – DKRW Wind today announced the sale of its construction ready Cedro Hill wind project. Cedro Hill is expected to be commercially operational by mid 2010. Located near the town of Oilton in Webb County about 40 miles east of Laredo, the Cedro Hill project is expected to be 150 megawatts (MW), using (100) 1.5 MW turbines.

Cedro Hill will be the first wind power project in Webb County. “The county has given the Cedro Hill project a warm reception, and we thank the local citizens for their support of clean, renewable wind energy,” said Trey Comiskey, developer of the project for DKRW Wind.

The power from the project is sold to CPS Energy, a municipal utility owned by the City of San Antonio. “We would like to thank CPS for their long-term support of renewable energy and for their support of the Cedro Hill project in particular” said Dave Ramm, CEO of DKRW Wind.

The project will support the local economy through royalty payments to landowners and property tax payments to the local tax jurisdictions. Construction will create up to 200 jobs at its peak. The project covers approximately 20,000 acres, however the actual footprint of the turbines is less than one percent of the total acreage. Landowners will continue using the remainder of the land for ranching, hunting, and oil and gas activities.
